Facelift - A step Ahead

Started in April 1987, the Journal of PFA since then never looked back. During past 25 years it has received a commendable recognition in the scientific forum nationally as well as outside the country. Journal of PFA is one of the few professional journals which has been published uninterruptedly since its inception maintaining on appreciable scientific standard with a moderate get ups always resisting commercialisation and holding on to high principles of scientific objectives and professional images it is indeed a matter of satisfaction that Dental Council of India keeping in view the track record and standard quality material has placed this Journal of PFA under Category-I of annexure 'A'.

In continuation to our strides to promote further the continuing dental education and updating fellows about recent advances in Dental Sciences & Research Senate of PFA, India Section at the last meeting cleared the proposal of Chief Editor to upgrade the journal by giving a facelift and increase the size and number of pages to accommodate the increasing demand by contributors and cut down wasting time for publications. We even intend to have journal 'online' with effect from January 2013.

Therefore, from this June 2012 issue, we have increased the page size to 8½ x 11" with increase in pages and quality of paper. We are confident that fellows and other readers would appreciate. It may be noted that access to this Journal is not limited to any one area or any one group of people or any one speciality. We welcome research articles from all disciplines and specialities on oral maxiofacial and dental health sciences not only for fellows of PFA but from any one from any corner of the country or the world involved in ethical research in any speciality of dental sciences.

Scientific obligation and financial implications of above commitments need not be over emphasised. The editor and the journal committee look forward for wholehearted support and participation from all fellows, contributors, dental institutions, subscribers and the advertisers for this noble venture.

Committed to the cause of JPFA
