Editorial

THE JOURNAL

We have just entered the fourteenth year of our publication. On the eve of the tenth year we wrote (Bull. India Section, Electrochem. Soc., Vol. 10, 2, 1961): "It was started in 1952 for the dissemination of scientific and technical information in different branches of Electrochemistry.... During these nine years we have been gradually expanding and improving the contents.... We hope to maintain the standards and do better service in the future". The Society hopes that the Journal is coming to the expectations of the readers through the years.

The Journal has taken the place of the Bulletin of the India Section with effect from 1964. The change-over has been smooth and of advantage to the Society, we should think. All this has been possible mainly due to the goodwill and cooperation of the Electrochemical Society Inc., New York.

It is intended to modify the contents and include new features in the future so that the publication may be more useful in the field of theoretical and applied electrochemistry. We are thankful to the members, patrons, subscribers, institutions and industries who have been helping us all along. We seek their continued cooperation and also suggestions so that the Journal could do better in the years to come.
