JLD Editorial

Greetings to all the JLD Readers,

Good reads have been pouring in from contributors, readers and subscribers. Worthy articles are appearing from practitioners, researchers and academicians. All new innovations, good findings and applications are forwarded through this journal.

The first article is on "Paperless Society", the concept originated way back in 1978 by Frederick Wilfred Lancaster, from paper communication to electronic communication is reflected in "Paperless Society: The Vision of An Oasis or Mirage; Implications for Libraries and Librarian's". The changes will be extensive, probably more extensive than any of us could guessed, as assumed by Lancaster.

Second article is on grey literature as term "Grey literature" in a sense is referred in the context of its nature as uncertain statutes of this information which is outside the publishing arenas and not trusted in peer viewed process. It is either unpublished or has been published in non-commercial form. Thought it not been peer reviewed, but may still be good, reliable information. Searching for such resource becomes difficult. Read and explore more through the article.

Third article is on use of e-resources. The study has explored the increase in use of the internet and also online e-resources and the study reveals that a hundred percent of the research scholars and faculty are using e-journals.

Fourth article is about awareness and use of Electronic Information Resources. Here the study advocates to increase the awareness for Optimal Utilization of Electronic Resources through a digital drive to attract the users.

Fifth is article is of use of Library Resources. It is observed that the developing the habit of using library resources will enhance user need for information. Library plays an important role in making users more proficient in using e-resources.

Sixth article is about, Footfall which is collectively used as a new measure for library utilization. This metrics that help to quantify the behavioural changes, the metrics that were never measured but now of relevance and significance can shed lights on the trend going on in Library usages.

Seventh article is "Classics in Library and Information Science Series : William Katz's Introduction to Reference Work".

Congratulations to the authors and good wishes to all the readers.
